Why your client's business needs Healthcare Entity Indemnity Insurance

Healthcare companies and medical practices operate in an environment where mistakes sometimes occur. They can have catastrophic consequences for patients, lead to significant financial costs and may cause reputational harm to your client's practice.

While doctors are protected by their own medical indemnity insurance, the business and its employees are equally vulnerable to disputes, complaints or claims for compensation. It is not unusual for patient claims to be directed against the practice in addition to the doctors involved in the care of the patient. That is why businesses need their own Healthcare Entity Indemnity Insurance.

Risks your client's business may face

Areas where your client's practice may be directly exposed to claims and inquiries where it needs its own insurance include:

Patient complaints and claims, linked to employees and systems for which the practice is legally liable:

- Breaches of privacy or confidentiality, such as reception staff providing patient details when they shouldn't
- Employees not adhering to follow-up systems resulting in delayed diagnosis and poor outcomes for patients
- Equipment failures or calibration errors resulting in incorrect readings or test errors which impact negatively on patient outcomes
- Treatment errors e.g. incorrect dosages or administering an incorrect vaccine

Workplace disputes, employment or contractual disputes and complaints arising from occupational, health and safety matters

Commercial exposures such as the costs of dealing with:

- Privacy breaches and mandatory notification obligations
- Public relations concerns following a claim, which could have an adverse impact on the reputation of the practice.

Whilst the Policy will not automatically cover employed doctors (as they generally have their own insurance), it will cover the business if they are involved in a matter because of the actions of an employed doctor for which the business is vicariously liable.
